Compromise

Bob Brackett, a lone bachelor, needed some articles with which to decorate his room. He inquired of a lady friend where such things were to be had, and she recommended the Woman's Exchange. Bob went there and made his purchases.

The same evening on returning from business he found them all in his room. Opening the package, he put a bureau scarf in its place, a centerpiece on his table under his reading lamp and a scented mouchoir case on his dresser. Then he sat down in his easy chair and surveyed the scene.

"By Jove," he exclaimed, "one would think a woman had done it all! What a feminine appearance the room has! There's everything a woman would provide-that is, everything except pillowshams. Pillowshams I'll never have. They're well named. They're a sham indeed-put on in the morning to look pretty, taken off at night, folded up and laid where they won't be stepped on. Of all the confounded feminine nonsense I ever heard of pillowshams are the worst. If ever I'm married there's one thing my wife shall never indulge in or force me to indulge in-pillowshams. Confound them!

Bob went to bed leaving a fire burning in the grate that illuminated his room and lay awake enjoying his newly acquired decorations.

"I can almost fancy myself married," he said, "and a nice little girl keeping house in this very room with me. It's one of a suit, and I could have the whole. Just think of coming home for dinner instead of stopping at a cheap restaurant, finding wifey at the door ready to throw her arms around my neck; dinner ready; with my arm around her waist we go into the dining room and while we eat talk over what has passed during the "Dinner finished, we go into the living room. I light a cigar, we read and chat, and so spend the evening.

"Good gracious!" he exclaimed. "I've forgotten to put a handkerchief in my nightshirt pocket."

He got out of bed and went to the bureau where he had left his monchoir case and felt for a handkerchief. The size he used at night was on the bottom of the pile, and with it he pulled out a slip of paper, which floated to the floor. Picking it up, he took it to the fireplace and saw by the light something written on it in a feminine Marriage is the natural lot of both sexes, and I don't see why a woman shouldn't seek a husband as well as a man seek a wife. I am twenty years old, have a pliable disposition and believe that the husband should lead, having his own way in everyized her to give it to any gentlemanlike young man who calls for it.

"Well, now, I like that!" exclaimed "What a lot of practical sense in it! And she'll let her husband have his own way about everything! Splendid! If fate throws us together there's one thing there'll be no trouble aboutthe pillowshams. She can have her own way about everything else."

Bob went to sleep dreaming of how the place would look if something came of this slip of paper and the very next day went again to the Woman's Exchange for a feminine article with a soul, a body, and a living body at

Three months from that date Bob Brackett and Louise Harwood, a very lovely girl-at least Bob thought she was-were married and went to live in his room till the other rooms in the suit became vacant and they could rent the whole. After a short wedding trip they returned to the apartment, and the bride began to survey it with a critical eye.

"Wouldn't you think," asked Bob, "that a woman had fixed it up?" "Well, yes, so far as it goes."

"What's wanting?" "Well, some curtains to the windows for one thing." "That's so. I never thought of them.

What else?" "Those pillows should be covered."

"With what?" "Shams."

"Louise," said the husband, squaring himself, "If there's any one thing I always detested it's pollowshams. No pillowshams for me, thank you."

"But you wouldn't have the pillows perfectly bare, would you?"

"Put on cases of the finest brussels lace if you like, but when you get 'em on keep 'em on. I don't propose to take a sham off my pillow every night, fold it up and put it somewhere."

"I'll do all that." "Nobody'll do it. I've sworn no shams shall be on my bed." After six months' squabbling over the pillowshams and a frequent reminder to the wife that he should have his own way in everything he proposed a compromise. He was proceeding to propose some kind of a pillowease that would look well, but would not be injured by being used to lay one's head on. But before he could do so his wife interrupted him. saying:

"All right. We'll compromise." "Well?" said the husband inquiring-

"We'll compromise on pillowshams." There was a pause, after which the husband remarked. "I give it un?"

LANDING AT RAKAHANGA.

Risky Feat and One That Sorely

Tries the Nerves. Rakahanga is a little coral atoll in the south sea, not very far from New Zealand. Few people ever visit it, and to judge from the account in Mr. Frank Burnett's "Through Tropic Seas" of the difficulties that attend a landing there none would care to go a second time.

At Rakahanga the feeling is that only by a miracle can a safe passage be made through what, by a stretch of the imagination, is called the entrance to the lagoon. Imagine a once good entrance obstructed by a wall of coral rising to within a few feet of the surface of the water. This coral wall is built by that wonderful creature, the coral polyp. Over it break with inconceivable fury huge ocean billows that travel with the speed of race horses, lashing and churning the water into a milk white foam and with a deafening roar throwing the spray to

The backwash of every breaker forms, on the outside of the wall of rock, a chasm fathoms deep, which is again filled up by the next rushing wave. To cross the abyss and reach thing. Since that sometimes does not occur for five or ten minutes | Onc Hundred Delegates to Territorial the passenger has plenty of time to reflect upon his misdeeds, to survey, the sublime scene and to wonder how in the world that fearful turmoil of water is to be crossed.

The delay does not tend to compose his nerves, but if he is observant he When the last of the three has passed and the chasm has been filled up the paddlers give a frightful yell that terrifles the unsuspecting passenger alfrom a bow.

Before the backwash can re-empty the chasm the boat is across. The TAFT WON'T PARADE passenger has hardly time to grasp how it is done before the paddlers have sprung to the reef and pulled the boat clear of the next roller, usually a small one.

In entering the lagoon the chief risk is that of an upset after crossing the chasm and a ducking in two or three feet of water, but on going out, if the boat does not reach the smooth water before the next succeeding swell breaks, woe betide it and its crew, for nothing will prevent its being swamped and carried, with all bands, back into the awful abyss by the inrush of broken water, out of which only the strongest and most skilful swimmers can emerge.

ART OF POISONING be a punishment from heaven than an accident. At the moment when Toxicology Made a Record In the Seventeenth Century.

SECRETS NOW HAPPILY LOST

It Was In Trying to Rediscover Them That Sainte-Croix, the Accomplice of the Notorious Mme. de Brinvilliers Met His Tragic Fate.

The basis of most poisons in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries was arsenic. It was extremely easy to procure, the taste was easy to hide, and until Marsh's test was discovered about a hundred years ago its traces were difficult to discover. In the seventeenth century toxicology reached heights that it has never since attained. The laboratories of the poisoners in France and Italy contained secrets happily lost today. The preparation of the potions used during the reigns of Louis XIII. and XIV, may be briefly described. animal was doctored with a dose of arsenic. After death the liquids of the body were carefully distilled, and the resultant was of extreme virulence, being composed of the virus of arsenic and the alkaloids of decomposition. When the animal thus killed was tilled liquid was a concentration of three poisons instead of two. For this Poster, Cagliostro.- Bookman Review reason the toad was the favorite subfect of experiment. This was the polson used by Mme. de Brinvilliers. Against it medical skill was almost helpless. The list of monarchs whose deaths were attributed by popular gossip to the effect of poison is a long one Catherine de' Medici was a known polsoner, surrounded by poisoners, and ber two sens, Francis II, and Charles IX., were probably hurried to their end by the administration of drugs as well as by their feeble state of health.

There are some grounds for the assertion that Louis XIII, died of polson. His mother, Marie de' Medici, was said to be the greatest poisoner of her age. The comment in Paris was that the king was well or ill as he agreed or quarreled with the queen mother. The state ministers ran desperate risks. Richelieu suffered from many curious illnesses. He knew his danger and took every precaution. Mazarin's death cannot whelly be explained by natural causes. The death of the sister of Charles II. of Eng land is also a matter of mystery.

The chief accomplice of Mme. de Brinvilliers and perhaps actually the instigator of many of her crimes was Gaudin de Sainte-Croix, than whom a more sinister scoundrel does not cross the pages of the century.

He was sent to the Sastille, liberated and met his death before Mme. de Brinvilliers herself was brought to trial. The accounts of his end are onflicting and illuminating. Accordng to one of them, Sainte-Croix was indeavoring to discover a poison the connations alone of which would be ble to kill. He had heard of the poloned napkin with which the young Dauphin, elder brother of Charles VII and wiped his face while playing at tennis and the contact of which alone was sufficient to kill. Then there was the gossip about the gloves belonging to Jeanne d'Albret, which had been prepared by one of the Italian poison ers in the train of Catherine de' Mediel, a crime which was never brought home to its instigators. The secrets of these poisons had been lost, and Sainte-Croix wished to find them. There came to pass one of those strange events which seem rather to pays her.-New York Times.

Sainte-Croix, leaning over his stove, watched his fatal mixture reach its highest state of intensity, the glass mask which covered his face and preserved him from the mortal exhala tions which escaped from the liquor became unfastened and dropped off.

Sainte-Croix fell to the ground as if struck by a thunderbolt.

After the death of Sainte-Croix Mme. de Brinvilliers took flight and found a refuge in London and afterward in the Netherlands. Her arrest was affected by stratagem, and she was brought back to Parls to stand trial. The most damaging testimony against her was that of the tutor, Braincourt, who had been in a measure her unwilling accomplice. In one part of his evidence the episode must have suggested to Dumas one scene between D'Artagnan and Lady de Winter described in "The Three Musketcers." Mme. de Brinvil-Hers was condemned and a full confession of her crimes was wrung from her by the application of the torture of the water. She remained seven hours in the torture chamber and she avowed all her crimes, but denied that the had any accomplices, The trial, torture and execution of Mms, de Brinvilliers served as a recful lesson. Poison did not disappear, but its practitioners were taught to curb their malevolent enthusiasms. She knew there were no servants there at the time, but felt no alarm. They arrived in the early evening and enjoyed being home again. At nearly midnight they sat softly talking together, with only the mellow moonlight flooding the rooms, when they heard a window off the south balcony being raised, and an instant later steps were heard in the hall.

Almost paralyzed with fear-no one to help, no weapon at hand-there flashed over the prima donna a realization of her power of song. "It has moved thousands," she thought, and with trembling notes she began to sing what had been uppermost in her thoughts before the entrance of the futruder, "Home, Sweet Home." The exquisite voice grew steadier, and it rang out in its sweetest, purest strains. Then followed "Old Folks at Home," but her audience had gone.
